Don't swallow the Greens—they come out brown

The Greens, and the broader green ideology, are deadly to humans—and the environment, Citizens Electoral Council leader Craig Isherwood said today.

“Green policies kill man and nature,” he charged. “In fact, such is their damage to the environment, greenies should be renamed ‘brownies.’”

Mr Isherwood said the Greens’ policy on renewable energy was especially destructive to nature.

“Solar is the Green policy to warm the planet and reduce biodiversity,” he stated. “Instead of greening arid areas with water and vegetation, greenies plan mass areas of solar panels which they call solar ‘forests’. Compare solar panels to plants: through photosynthesis, plant life creates its own body by transforming energy and inert matter (e.g. the sun and water) into oxygen and complex sugars, to feed the atmosphere and the food chain. Through evapotranspiration, plants create rain and cool the earth.

He continued, “By contrast, solar energy costs more to produce than it gives back, and contributes nothing to the atmosphere, other than the output of heat. Nature’s green, leafy vegetation is not welcome anywhere near a solar array, because it ‘competes’ for the sunshine. (Ironically however, leafy plants can happily grow all over coal-fired and nuclear power plants.) Solar cells will never compete with plants for effectiveness in capturing and using the sun’s energy, so why on earth do greenies want to fry the earth by pushing them?”

He also pointed out that solar panels are deadly to water insects, which disrupts the food chain and is a threat to biodiversity. The solar panels reflect the sun’s rays, polarising the light. This is a trap for insects which lay their eggs on pools of water, because the way they detect the water is by the polarised light. To such an insect, the polarised light reflecting off the solar panel is ‘super-water’.

In arid regions where greenies plan massive solar arrays, the shortage of water makes it far more likely the insects will find the solar array to lay their eggs. Eggs laid on the solar panels are fried—not good for the insect or the solar panels. This not only threatens to kill off certain species of insects in a local region, but is a threat to the species higher up the food chain that depend upon the insects.

“Human beings have the creative power to transform the biosphere, to increase its power to sustain not only human life, but all life—and greenies hate it,” Mr Isherwood explained.

“For example, by building infrastructure to divert a small percentage of water in high rainfall areas that otherwise just goes out to sea, we can green deserts and create more rainfall. That is a truly ‘green’ idea.

“But the Greens define nature as untouchable ... except by them. They want to keep the deserts brown, as well as create solar heat sinks to turn other areas brown too.

“It is a completely unscientific view,” he said, “because nature itself is constantly transforming. Many arid areas were once lush rainforests, before climate changes thousands of years ago reduced the power of biospheric cycles in those locations, and they gradually lost the ability to support life.

“By understanding how the biosphere actually works, we can intervene to strengthen it, and there’s nothing greener than that.”

Mr Isherwood urged people to study Lyndon LaRouche’s concept of the North American Water and Power Alliance (NAWAPA) as a project to increase the power of the biosphere.

Learn the real cause of the financial crisis, and why it ain't over

In July 2007, a number of Australian superannuation funds covering teachers in Victoria, a children's hospital charity in Perth and other investors discovered millions of dollars in losses from their exposure to certain hedge funds.

This was one of the first Australian signs of the beginning of the global financial crisis.

Within months dozens of local councils across Australia lost tens of millions of dollars of ratepayers' funds invested in Lehman Brothers' Grange Securities.

Through both events, it was clear that Australia was caught up in the chain-reaction financial collapse unfolding in the U.S., which started with the Bear Stearns collapse in July 2007, and spread rapidly into a worldwide economic crisis that reached a crescendo in the jarring crack of September 2008.

The nature of these events was exactly what Lyndon LaRouche had forecast from as early as June 1994, which forecast the CEC had tirelessly echoed in Australia for over a decade.

PM (for now) Julia Gillard attempted to cover up the government's advanced warnings from the CEC in November 2008, by lying, "No-one 12 months ago was talking about a global financial crisis."

It's up to you

Now, you, the reader have a decision to make. You are being told, by the media, the major political parties, the Reserve Bank, and most of the "experts", that the crisis is over, and we in Australia are fine.

But, you are also being told, by the CEC and LaRouche, that the crisis isn't over, it is systemic, unstoppable under current policy, and set to explode into global hyperinflation.

Why do LaRouche and the CEC say that? What made LaRouche and the CEC right before, when almost everyone else was wrong?

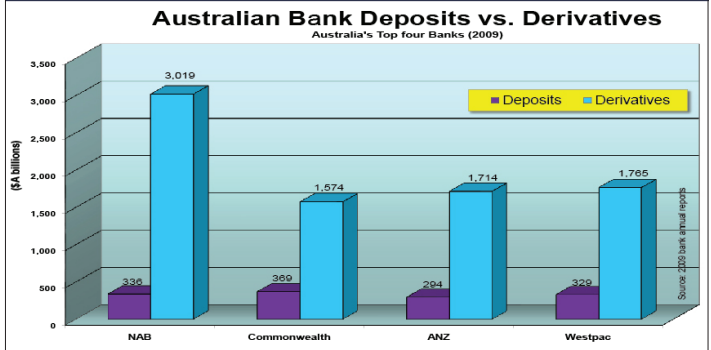

You have to decide if you want to believe the discredited experts, or to find out what LaRouche and the CEC know. To find out, invest some time to watch the latest LPACTV production, The Takedown of Glass-Steagall.

Watch the film at www.larouchepac.com/gsfilm

The Takedown of Glass-Steagall is the most comprehensive and competent analysis of the cause of the financial crisis that you will see.

Most importantly, by understanding how the crisis came about, you will understand how LaRouche and the CEC know it is far from over, and that it is building towards a global scale version of Weimar Germany's 1923 hyperinflation explosion.

Enact the Glass-Steagall to stop derivatives cancer!

Most Australians already know through their daily lives that it isn't true that Australia escaped the economic crisis, but when the money-printing in the U.S. and Europe can no longer paper over the collapse, and the meltdown of those economies overwhelms even the actually productive economies of China and India, the shock Australia will suffer from the collapse of our mining exports to China and the withdrawal of foreign credit will be so great that the September-October 2008 "GFC" will seem like a picnic, and you will know the media, politicians and bankers are liars.

As terrifying as that sounds, it isn't really, because by understanding the cause of the crisis, you will also understand the real solution, which LaRouche is leading the world to implement: a new Glass-Steagall regulation, a new financial system centred on national banking, and an unprecedented transformation of the world economy and biosphere through grand infrastructure projects beginning with NAWAPA, and supported by long-overdue development projects in other parts of the world, including ideas such as the Bradfield Scheme in northern Australia.

And when you understand the solution, join the fight to get it implemented.

To compare the CEC's record to that of the growing chorus of leaders, including PM Julia Gillard, who claim that nobody could have seen this crisis coming.
