My life began on a mixed cereal and sheep grazing farm in the Lock area of South Australia, and for the last 20 plus years I have been driving trucks servicing the rural community; transporting livestock, fertilizers and more.

Working alongside my parents, for the first 25 years of my life, is where my passion for truth, and love for tinkering in the workshop originated. Rather than just repairing small pieces of equipment I like to tinker with manufacturing parts that will improve its functionality.

In my teenage years I would ask myself questions like "where does money come from" and wondered why light acts in so many different ways. This questioning led me to read conspiracy theory type information as I got older. That was until around 18 years ago when I met the CEC in Bourke Street Mall while on holiday in Melbourne and began to unfold the truth of the grand conspiracy behind oligarchism and their continual drive to suppress human achievement. Innovation is allowed but real scientific thought is not encouraged.

Once truth is discovered, it has to be told, which is why I'm representing the CEC in the Senate in South Australia. Making the system work for everyone is important. Rather than allowing the savvy few, the banking and corporate cabal who work the system and take advantage of the public's financial illiteracy, I have to speak out in order to force power back into the people's hands. That's where Glass-Steagall bank separation which the CEC is urgently calling for, will be the crucial first step to deal with the speculative banking system, followed by a science driver recovery program for our industries around infrastructure we can make this happen.
